A Gazetteer of Wodwibas

Wodwibas is a high inland country far from any sea. The prevailing winds blow out of the northeast, and the south of the region runs cold. Its folk name their land in the Suese tongue — far + land.

Powers & Fellowships

the Iron Compact — league of towns.
the Wardens of Star — rangers of the old roads.
the Order of the Salt — knightly order.

Cities, Towns & Villages

Takhamikh · city

Walled city of some 31,570 souls, behind a sheltered anchorage; seat of Takhamikh Vale. Its trade runs to salt, fish and peat. The ferrymen refuse to work the Silverwater after dark, and none will say what they saw.

(home + hold, in the Suese tongue)

Gusikh · city

Harbor city of some 28,860 souls, where the land meets the Ungi Deep; seat of Gusikhshire. Its trade runs to furs, fish and timber. Something has been taking sheep on the northeast road to Nusikh; the shepherds say it walks upright.

(river + stead, in the Suese tongue)

Swiftport · city

Walled city of some 28,770 souls, on the shore of the Ungi Deep; seat of the Swiftmark. Its trade runs to wool, grain and oil. The Iron Compact has posted a bounty on any traveler's account of the ruins in Bearwood.

(common tongue: swift + port)

Saskisikh · town

Trading town of some 6,670 souls, at a crossing of the Stillrush; seat of Saskisikh Vale. Its trade runs to wine, river trade and oil. The toll-keeper on the Takhasikh road has not been seen in a fortnight; the tolls are still being collected.

(new + stead, in the Suese tongue)

Nusikh · town

Hill town of some 6,310 souls, astride the Oldflow; seat of the Nusikh Reach. Its trade runs to river trade, timber and furs. The Wardens of Star has posted a bounty on any traveler's account of the ruins in Hiddenwood.

(gold + stead, in the Suese tongue)

Snudwikh · town

River town of some 6,260 souls, on the Longbeck; seat of Snudwikh Vale. Its trade runs to river trade, wine and furs. The toll-keeper on the Takhasikh road has not been seen in a fortnight; the tolls are still being collected.

(ford + hold, in the Suese tongue)

Tokwasikh · town

Trading town of some 5,610 souls, behind a sheltered anchorage, in Gusikhshire. Its trade runs to horses, fish and wool. An old shaft above town broke into galleries no one dug, and the miners' wages have tripled.

(field + stead, in the Suese tongue)

Kosikh · town

Hill town of some 5,420 souls, on the Longbeck, in the Swiftmark. Its trade runs to timber, oil and furs. A ship out of Chepshore came in crewed by half the men who set out, and the survivors will not speak of the Ungi Deep.

(lake + hold, in the Suese tongue)

Wemesniw · town

Trading town of some 5,200 souls, on the river, in Gusikhshire. Its trade runs to timber, river trade and furs. A courier from Gusikh was found at the 4-mile stone with empty saddlebags and a full purse.

(market + hold, in the Suese tongue)

Khigesko · village

Hamlet of some 850 souls, on the river, in the Swiftmark. Its trade runs to wool, grain and horses. An old shaft above town broke into galleries no one dug, and the miners' wages have tripled.

(eagle + stead, in the Suese tongue)

Takhasikh · village

Fishing village of some 750 souls, on River Kida, in the Swiftmark. Its trade runs to wool, grain and river trade. An old shaft above town broke into galleries no one dug, and the miners' wages have tripled.

(home + stead, in the Suese tongue)

Chepshore · village

Way-station of some 730 souls, on the lakeshore, in Saskisikh Vale. Its trade runs to horses, oil and wool. Wolves came down from Deepwood a season early this year; the hunters say something moved them.

(common tongue: market + shore)

Of the Suese Tongue

The names on this map are not random letters: the land's own language builds them from roots, and the same root recurs wherever the land repeats itself. Among its words:

ta — “water”
skut — “old”
di — “stone”
ed — “salt”
egag — “cold”
dwo — “wolf”
takham — “home”
sanu — “dark”

A settlement often ends in -so or -wo or -sikh or -sko (“stead”).
The region calls itself Wodwibas: far + land, in the Suese tongue.

Every part of this survey — coasts, rivers, roads, names, and rumors — was woven from a single seed phrase. The same phrase always weaves the same world; share it, and another hand can hold this exact map.
The phrase of this world is “winterdeep”.
